Today after school I had to decide whether to do the virtuous thing and walk away from the ATM... or do the dishonest thing and take the ill, got and gain... to be precise $60.

I wondered if it was better to do the honest thing and leave it and not gain... or to take and gain.

I cautiously looked around. Not a person in sight, except for the laughing tramp nearby. It can't be his money.

Almost anyone would take money at first sight. People think they can do wrong and get away with it. But that doesn't justify my stealing.

WOW!!
It would be dishonest and theft to take something not rightfully mine. In this case money.

I was blank and jittery of these thoughts. What a dilemma!
I knew it was theft but if I don't take it someone who may not use it wisely will.

If my parents found out they would be humiliated even embarrassed and disappointed.

I could turn in half to the bank so I would still be praised and thanked.
People think I'm innocent and trustworthy, but if I do this act, people will label me as a thief and a crook.

So what did you do?

Well I didn't take it, I was thinking for so long the money slipped back in. Problem solved.